Finished Leather Look

Grain & Texture

Nubuck

Suede

Top Grain (Cow)

Full Grain (Cow)

Milled Leather (Cow)

i Milled Leather refers to a type of leather that has undergone a process known as milling, where the leather is tumbled in large rotating drums. This mechanical action softens the leather and enhances its natural grain pattern, giving it a more relaxed, textured look with a softer feel. The milling process also helps bring out a more pronounced, natural grain, which can vary depending on the leather type and hide quality.

Pull-up Leather (Cow)

i Pull-up leather is a type of aniline leather that has been infused with oils or waxes. When stretched or pulled, the leather lightens in color due to the movement of the oils, creating a "distressed" or aged look. This finish is often used for products like jackets, bags, and furniture, where a vintage or rugged aesthetic is desired. The shiny surface and the variation in color tones when the leather is manipulated are classic indicators of pull-up leather.
